Oveta Culp Hobby was born on January 19, 1905. A parliamentarian for the Texas House of Representatives, executive vice president of the Houston Post, and civic leader, she became the head of the Women's Interest Section of the War Department in 1941. The following year, she was tapped by General George Marshall to create the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps (WAAC). As its first director, and later director of the Women's Army Corps (WAC), Hobby set out to recruit, train, and equip the corps from scratch. She set a standard of service for the corps, calling such service "a serious job for serious women." A major at the start of the WAAC, by the end of World War II she had been promoted to the rank of colonel and had received the Army's Distinguished Service Cross. She was the first woman to receive this medal, the highest noncombat award given by the Army. Hobby became the first Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare when that cabinet post was created under President Eisenhower. She died on August 16, 1995.

Belle Boyd was a female spy for the Confederacy. Born on May 9, 1844, she circulated among Union officials and soldiers, gathering information and carrying important letters and papers to Confederate leaders. Sometimes she delivered information herself--dodging guards and bullets; other times she had men pass the information farther behind Union lines. Boyd braved gunfire to enter a battle zone on May 23, 1862, providing General Stonewall Jackson with intelligence about the number of Union troops expected to attack his soldiers. As a result of this information, Jackson strengthened his forces and won the battle. Although she was able to escape capture several times, Boyd was finally caught and tried as a spy. She served 17 months in prison between 1862 and 1863, gaining freedom in an exchange for a Northern prisoner. After the war, Boyd toured the United States and England, lecturing about her war experiences. When she died in 1900, the women's auxiliary of the Grand Army of the Confederacy paid for her burial. In 1919, a Confederate veteran paid for a new granite tombstone to mark her gravesite.

Anna M. Rosenberg, former regional director, Social Security Board, Region II (New York) and owner of a public relations agency, was appointed Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower and Personnel in 1950. A recognized labor relations expert, she was responsible for coordinating all defense policies on military manpower and civilian personnel. An advocate of universal military training, Ms. Rosenberg sought to improve the conditions of service life. She also was a proponent of integration, stressing that integration was necessary for effective use of black manpower. At her recommendation, and with the approval of Secretary of Defense George Marshall, the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services (DACOWITS) was formed in August 1951. DACOWITS was made up of 50 prominent women from the wartime women's corps, academia, business, the arts, politics, and the legal profession. The committee's mandate--given declining enlistments--was to lead a unified recruiting drive to increase the number of women in the Services, to interpret to the public the role of women in the Services, and to promote acceptance of military service as a prestigious career. DACOWITS also sought to reassure parents that young women in the military were properly supervised. DACOWITS continues to exist today.

Mary Hays McCauley, "Molly Pitcher," was born on October 13, 1754 near Trenton, New Jersey. She fought beside her husband, John Casper Hays, who served with the First and Seventh Pennsylvania Regiments of the Continental Army against the British Redcoats. She earned her nickname, "Molly Pitcher," because she brought water to soldiers exhausted by battle and heat. On June 28, 1778, during the Battle of Monmouth, when her husband collapsed from the heat, Molly replaced him at his cannon and fought in his place for the rest of the battle. Molly also swabbed cannon bores and loaded shot. The General Assembly of Pennsylvania passed "An act for the relief of Molly M'Kolly" in 1822, honoring her services and providing her an annuity and cash grant of 40 dollars--a lifetime soldier's half-pay pension--and one suit of clothes or the equivalent in cash. Monuments were erected at her gravesite in 1876 and 1916. Her likeness also appears on the monument commemorating the Battle of Monmouth.

Grace Hopper was born on December 9, 1906. She graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Vassar College in 1928 and received a Ph.D. in mathematics from Yale University in 1934. Hopper joined the Naval Reserve during World War II and was commissioned as lieutenant, junior grade. Assigned to the Bureau of Ordnance Computation Project at Harvard University, she worked as a programmer on the Mark I, the first information-processing digital computer. Discharged from active duty in 1946, she continued working for the Navy as a reservist until her retirement as a captain in 1966. Hopper was recalled to active duty in 1967 and tasked with standardizing the Navy's computer programming languages. She was promoted to commodore (rear admiral) in 1983. When she retired from the Navy at the age of 80 in 1986, she was the oldest officer on active duty. Grace Hopper died on January 1, 1992. On January 6, 1996, the Navy christened the guided missile destroyer, the USS Hopper, at the Bath Iron Works. The christening marked only the second time in the Navy's history that a warship had been named for a woman from the Navy's own ranks.

This calendar celebrates and commemorates the achievements and activities of American women in the armed forces between 1760 and 1998. Notable achievements or milestones are reported, typically in relation to a person's date of birth or death, the date of her particular achievement, or an influential event in the lives of military women. The calendar aims to show the diversity, breadth, and depth of women's experience in the United States military. Achievements of women in all branches of the Services are depicted, and both individual and service-wide milestones are noted. The calendar also includes Federal and other holidays.

The calendar attempts to be representative of women in all walks of military life, but is not exhaustive. It commemorates women who served beside their husbands during the Revolutionary and Civil Wars and those who were disguised as male soldiers. The calendar also notes women who served as spies during the Revolutionary War and the Civil War—in the latter conflict both Confederate and Union spies are reported. During the Spanish American War, World War I and II, the Korean War, and the Vietnam War, women served predominately in the various nursing corps, and in other noncombat positions. Beginning in World War II, however, with the formation of the auxiliary women's services (WAAC, WAC, WAF, WFTD, WASP, WAVES, and SPARS), women also began to serve the military in other capacities.

Beginning in the 1970s, when women became eligible to attend the Service academies, their accomplishments became more diverse. Many of the women in this calendar are celebrated as firsts. For example, the first woman to graduate first in her class from the Naval Academy, the first woman combat pilot, the first woman to head a state-level National Guard unit, the first woman brigade commander, and so on. The calendar also honors women whose breakthroughs were accomplished alongside their military service and also identifies military Olympians, astronauts, and government officials.

As of September 1, 1998, the total resident population of the United States was approximately 270,498,000, of which there were approximately 137,992,000 women, or 51 percent. That same month, there were 195,655 women in the United States military active duty forces, representing approximately 14 percent of the military. Of this total, approximately 44.6 percent were minorities. There were 71,213 women in the Army, 49,150 women in the Navy, 9,779 women in the Marines, and 65,513 women in the Air Force. The Army has the highest percentage of African-American and other minority women; they constitute almost 43 percent and almost 7 percent, respectively, of Army women. The Marines have the highest percentage of Hispanic members; approximately 13 percent of Marine women are Hispanic.

Not everything mentioned in the listing of day-by-day events represents something positive. Women have been injured and killed in the line of duty and also captured as prisoners of war. However, although women have had difficulties in advancing within the armed forces, this calendar attempts to highlight their accomplishments.

The calendar was compiled for the Defense Equal Opportunity Management Institute under an Interagency Agreement with the Library of Congress.

Homepages

The World Wide Web contains a wide variety of resources on women in the military, as well as general information sources. It is also useful to check each Service's homepage for links to various useful sites. The numerous webpages on the Civil War provide information on women in that war.
